Do you need the power for your medical equipment?

Your power can go out unexpectedly... you need to be ready and have a plan

Talk to carers, family and friends about making a backup plan that covers what to do if your electricity goes out without warning. A plan could cover:

- What steps will you take—go to a friend's house?
- How will you get there—do you have transport and will you be able to transport your equipment?
- Have a way of contacting people if the power goes out—remember, some phones don't work without electricity.
- Who will you call—a contact list of names, addresses and telephone numbers of your doctor, the nearest hospital, and someone nearby who can assist you. Keep this somewhere handy so you can find it easily.
- Keep backup medical equipment fully charged at all times and ready to go if you need to use it.

Register as a life support customer with your electricity company

Registering as a life support customer with your energy company is important.

It means that if they are planning to cut off the power for works or some other reason, they will tell you before it happens so you can make other arrangements to power your equipment until the power comes back on.

Having a backup plan is still important even if you are a registered life support customer... unexpected power outages can happen.

If you want to be registered as a life support customer:

- ✓ Contact your electricity company and ask them to send you a registration form to complete.
- ✓ Visit your doctor—they will need to fill out some details and sign it to prove that you need life support equipment.
- ✓ Return the form to your electricity company as soon as possible—you won't get registered until they get it.
- ✓ Tell your electricity company if any of your details change—like your address or contact details.
